Notes and Queries.

The Drummer case was argued before the Supreme Court yesterday. It is taken under advisement. William M. Cutter, the short hand reporter is in the city, or was, yesterday. Mr. Adolphus Waitz returned here yesterday after an absence from the State of several months. He looks as if the salt sea air of San Francisco had been grateful to his well rounded structure. The new bell on the school house, or rather, the old Curry bell on the new school house is a very convenient thing for the children and teachers. Two ex-legislators, namely, Hon. S. E. Jones of Dutch Nick's and Hon. J. W. Haines of Douglas were in the city yesterday. There never was a finer day seen under the snows of the Sierra than was experienced yesterday. Dahl, the man who had his skull fractured while pruning Gen. Edwards' trees, is thought to be quite out of danger. The doctors think his case a very remarkable one. Why don't you register your name?

Mr. Chas. Brown, late Superintendent of the Houston mine was in the city yesterday.

Men who are not very old (or who think they are not), can recollect well enough the land crash in 1836-37. We mean the bursting of the bubble in Eastern land speculation. It sobered the people of the Atlantic seaboard and made many a conversion to the sinfulness of stock gambling. When the flush times in Alabama and Mississippi met with a sudden collapse so great and demoralizing was the reaction that Mississippi went so far as to repudiate her public debts by Legislative statute. Probably her burdens were greater than she could bear. Every body who has read anything of Sidney Smith's writings will recall the bitterness of his scorn when Pennsylvania failed to meet the interest on her bonded debt. The witty parson had been gambling a little and got bitten. So he growled. The history of the California mining towns is the history of the few shrewd fellows who got out in time to avoid the inevitable tumble, took their little fortunes to San Francisco and there rose and fell with the tide. In 1863-64 the way that sudden wealth became, all at once, sudden poverty, was bewildering to behold; and men were abundant then who thought that the Comstock had petered out. It was more than seven years before the revival came. It came with the development of the Crown Point bonanza. But in 1872, in May, came another smash. Stocks went down, down, down to zero. But all the vast wealth which lies in and behind the Nevada Bank has been dug out of the ground since that crash when everybody thought the world was coming to an end. Also, meantime, the Justice mine had developed a great vein of precious quartz. But somehow the people who like the excitement of the stock exchange have had the blues ever since Halston died. There has been a gradual losing of courage among the speculators since the Bank of California had its dark day. But, if we reason by the light of past experience there is no special reason for the present depression. As we say, there was a much longer time in which there were no developments between the panic and consequent depression in 1863-64 and the bonanza days of '71 when Jones and Hayward made their strike in the Crown Point than there has been since then. In 1871 first came Crown Point, then Belcher; and then, after almost no hiatus at all came the Con. Virginia and California. If the rich men whose fortunes were made out of the Comstock have made up their minds not to spend any of their wealth in further developments, and if the populace, the outsiders, have been miffed of all they can stand, there is a reason for the present panic. In other words there is a loss of confidence. But great crises develop great men; and we may yet see some bold and competent leader step to the front, inspire the public with a new courage and bring about the restoration we all need so much. We cannot lose faith in the Comstock. We believe it will continue for generations yet to come to yield more silver and gold than any lode of quartz ever yielded before. There must and will come a revival. The chance for a fortune is too great and tempting for any serious abatement of prospecting, much less its total cessation. The night is black, but there is bright day beyond it.

Under the Mosaic dispensation Prof. Stewart's pillory Act has been declared unconstitutional. There happens to be a certain Judge Moses in Virginia City; hence the aforesaid dispensation. One Mike Kelly lapped Mrs. Kelly. Mrs. Kelly in may itly tuk the law uv 'em. Mr. District Attorney Drake appeared for the State. Bob Lindsay, Esq., represented Mike. Bob moved to dismiss the case, (an alleged infraction of the Stewart bill), upon the ground that the said statute contemplated the infliction of cruel and unusual punishment, that is to say, the tying of the culprit up to a post. Drake denied that the bill was unconstitutional, or that the punishment prescribed for wife-beating was either cruel or unusual. Lindsay returned to the charge, and the result was that Moses, the law giver, declared the statute void and of no effect. We suspect that his Honor's opinion is eminently a sound one.

A case for a reform School is that of the lad mentioned in the Chronicle of last evening. That paper informs us that a twelve year-old son of Mrs. Anglum, the habitual drunkard, whose repeated arrests have been mentioned from time to time, broke from the City Jail this morning. The lad has been kept in the State Orphan Asylum at Carson for some months, but makes his escape every opportunity and comes up to Virginia. He was seen on the street this morning and taken to the jail for safe keeping until the next Carson train should leave. As there was no charge against the lad he was allowed to remain in the kitchen while the jailer went home to breakfast. The boy was no sooner alone than he unscrewed the lock from the door and made his escape. He has not been recaptured.

Cutts & Co., as will be seen by their advertisement in another column, Moore, Cutts & Co. will continue to supply families with the best quality of fire wood, also they sell coal, lime, laths and plaster. They attend to their business with promptness, regularity and honest dealing and are deserving of a liberal patronage.

COLORED MASON'S FUNERAL.
William Davis, a colored man was buried yesterday under the auspices of the Masonic order of which he was a member. The turn-out was quite a numerous and very respectable one. The deceased was Sergeant at Arms of the colored Hayes and Wheeler Club of this city, and a much respected citizen. His disease was dropsy.

A hopeful missionary held forth last night in the chapel at Chinatown, to the paganish dwellers thereabout. The returns have not yet been announced.

An Indian stole a pair of boots at Austin and was arrested and fined $25 with the alternation of 12 1/2 days in jail. This is hardly worth noting, but the fact that he paid his fine (as the Reveille tells us he did), is something to be wondered at.

One Gustav Volkstatt, a tailor has absconded from Austin, leaving his creditors in the lurch.

OUR BEE PASTURES.

Probably the most astonishing feature about the progress the State has made during the past few years has been in the honey industry. Originally there were no bees here, and when, less than a quarter of a century ago, a few colonies were transported to this coast, the result was almost magical. To-day the mountains are full of wild bees, descended and strayed from the tame colonies, and in some of the canyons of Lower California a profitable business is prosecuted in cutting bee trees and canning the wild honey. There is no such thing as having to kill the bees when the honey is taken from them, as in colder climates, for there is scarcely a month in the year when they cannot find food for sweets. The greatest progress in this industry that was probably ever recorded in the world has attended the efforts of several bee-keepers in the lower counties of the State. The shipment from one county last year aggregated over 100 tons of pure honey. Think of it, reckoning honey by the hundred tons. One apiarist alone in San Diego county has upward of 2,000 hives of bees, and these live and produce an enormous crop of honey, besides doubling their number every year, with no other pasture than the wild sage which carpets the hills and mountains. These pastures are next to inaccessible, and, except for the purpose to which they have been put, are of no earthly use.

These bee pastures embrace a very large area of country, extending from Santa Barbara in a narrow belt to Lower California. This land is very precious, and the bee keepers are in no danger of being encroached upon by civilization, as the sheep men have been. They may enjoy perpetual immunity from the encroachments which have broken up and disbanded the large herds and flocks which once held undisputed sway on all the plateaus and plains. Probably San Diego county owes more of her recent prosperity to this one interest than to all others. Men are pushing back into the mountains and selecting little nooks where a garden can be raised and a cow or two kept, and preparing to make permanent homes for their families. A few colonies will, in a short time, stock the place with a hundred hives, and although the price of honey, owing to the rapidity with which the business has sprung from a single germ into enormous proportions, is not satisfactory, a market is fast being sought in the East and in Europe, and it is safe to say that the price will not be any lower than it has already been.—S. F. Chronicle.

New York, April 13.—There is a generally-believed story in the street that Jay Gould unloaded large amounts of Northwestern railroad stock on Jim Keene just before the recent panic, possibly in revenge for Keene's coming to Tremor W. Park's assistance in the Panama stock panic. Keene's counter move is awaited with interest.
